Explanation:

A conflict of interest, according to the Uniform Requirements for Manuscripts Submitted to Biomedical Journals by the ICMJE (International Committee of Medical Journal Editors), exists when an author has financial or personal relationships that could inappropriately influence—or be perceived to influence—the content of the manuscript.

With respect to material conflicts of interest, this may include financial connections to companies whose products are directly or indirectly mentioned in the article. Such a company could be, for example, a pharmaceutical firm that manufactures or markets a drug referenced in the manuscript—or a competitor product.

Financial relationships may include employment, consulting, speaker fees, reimbursement of travel costs, research support, or other third-party funding.

Non-financial conflicts may arise through close personal relationships with individuals whose commercial or ideological interests might be affected by the article (e.g., partners, family members, etc.).

This declaration refers to any relevant interests within the past five years and currently.
